WHAT MOVES GOLD

Three forces set the price. A handful of players move it. And it only really moves in one window of the Malaysian day.

THREE FORCES, IN ORDER

Gold has no earnings, no dividend and no management team. Its price is a verdict on three things, and everything else is noise wearing a headline.

FORCE 01

Real interest rates

Gold pays you nothing to hold it. When real rates rise, holding it costs more and money leaves. When real rates fall, the cost of holding drops and money returns. This is the slow force, and it sets the months.

FORCE 02

The dollar

Gold is priced in dollars, so the two usually lean against each other — dollar up, gold down. Usually, not always. Treat it as context for why a level held, never as a signal by itself.

FORCE 03

Risk sentiment

When markets are frightened, money moves into gold fast. These are the moves you see on the news. They are violent, they are thin, and they do not last. Fear moves are the worst time to enter and the best time to watch.

None of the three tells you where to enter. They tell you why a level held, and that is all you should ask of them.

WHO IS ON THE OTHER SIDE

Every order you send is filled by somebody. Knowing who is in the market is what stops you believing you can lead it.

Central banks

They buy and hold, in size, for reasons that have nothing to do with this week. They do not chase price and they do not stop out.

Bullion and investment banks

They make the market. They carry the size that turns a level, and they are the reason a level turns at all.

Funds

They trade the macro story over weeks and months. Their entries are the trends you are trying to join.

Retail

The smallest participant and the loudest. Retail volume does not move gold. Retail stop losses, clustered in obvious places, sometimes do.

You are not predicting this market. You are joining a move the size already started, late and small, and taking your piece of it.

WHEN GOLD MOVES

All times in MYT, because that is the clock on your wall. Liquidity is not a detail — it decides whether a level holds or gets spiked through.

FIGURE 1

Schematic. Sessions overlap; volume does not spread evenly. The gold block is where most of the day's range gets made.

ASIA · 07:00–15:00 MYT

Thin. Gold drifts, ranges, and breaks levels it has no intention of respecting. Most Asian-session breakouts are fakeouts by London.

LONDON · 15:00–00:00 MYT

Real volume arrives. Levels start behaving: the ones that matter get tested properly and the ones that do not get taken out cleanly.

THE OVERLAP · 20:30–00:00 MYT

London and New York in the market together. Deepest liquidity, cleanest moves, tightest spread. If you only have three hours a day for gold, take these.

One standing rule across all of it: no new entry 30 minutes either side of a high-impact release. The news lockout costs you the occasional good trade and saves you the spikes.
